ACADEMIC PROFILE

I have thus far delivered nearly 100 papers at scientific conferences in Israel and abroad; published three academic books with the fourth forthcoming and the fifth in process of writing – all as sole author; published 88 papers in leading Israeli and international refereed academic journals and academic books, the vast majority of which I was the sole author; and organized and chaired about 40 academic conferences. I have also frequently represented my university in interviews and commentary articles in the Israeli and international media on subjects related to the Middle East and Africa, particularly regarding the Maghreb-Sahel environs and dealing with the Middle Eastern and African Jihadist Terror, including the "Islamic State" and the illegal migration to Europe. During this period, and along with my research, teaching and supervising assignments, I successively earned between 4.9-5 points out of 5 in the university's annual teaching surveys. I have also taken an active interest in additional administrative and academic aspects of the department, the faculty and the broader university sphere.

My research and investigations into Libya's Qaddafi and post-Qaddafi eras, as well as my scholarly publications on Sudan's politics, jihadist organizations and the Islamic State in Libya and their geostrategic and political environs, and Muslim migration to Europe have become central and well-known in the international academic research field. Most noteworthy among my publications are the book Qaddafi's Libya in World Politics (Lynne Rienner publication), which presents a unique and comprehensive map of Libya's foreign policy, tracing Tripoli's relations with the United States and the USSR during the Cold and post-Cold War eras; the dynamics of inter-Arab relations and of Qaddafi's leadership and conflicts in Africa. While conducting an in-depth analysis of Libya's failures and successes on foreign scenes, the book also examines major junctures of domestic affairs. Also the book, Sudan in Civil War: Between Africanism, Arabism and Islam, which in 2016 is still the only book ever written in Hebrew on Sudan's contested national identities and armed conflicts, has become a basic study text in all departments of Middle Eastern and African studies in Israel's academic institutions, particularly those dealing with topics related to political, ethnic and tribal conflicts and to irredentism and separatism. The book was also translated into Arabic and gained broad circulation in the Arab academy. Also noteworthy, my edited book The Maghreb: Politics, Society, Economy, is still the only book ever written in Hebrew on the region's Arab and Berber societies and political and economic challenges during the 1990s. My fourth book (as editor), Modern Kuwait: The Emergence of Parliamentarism: Tribal Societies, is forthcoming in 2016, expectedly offering an important contribution to the book shelf on the Middle East in general and the Gulf area in particular.

Noteworthy also are my numerous articles, among the most recent of which are the following: "The Islamic State's War in Libya: Redrawing Libya's Geopolitical Map and Geostrategic Environs" (accepted for publication in Diplomacy & Statecraft); "Radical Islam versus the Nation-State: Violent Conflicts in Northeast Africa and the Nile Valley," in Religion, Politics, Society, and the State, Jonathan Fox ed., (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2012), pp. 131-145; "Israel's Clandestine Diplomacy with Sudan: Two Rounds of Extraordinary Collaboration," in Israel's Clandestine Diplomacies, Clive Jones and Tore T. Petersen eds., (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2013), pp. 153-168; "Britain's Return to Libya: From the Battle of al-Alamein in the Western Libyan Desert to the Military Intervention in the 'Arab Spring' Upheaval," Middle Eastern Studies, Vol. 49, No. 5, September 2013, pp. 675-695; "Libya, the Tuareg and Mali on the Eve of the 'Arab Spring' and in its Aftermath: An Anatomy of Changed Geo-political Constellation," The Journal of North African Studies, Vol.18, No. 4, September 2013, pp. 544-559; "The Effects of the 'Arab Spring' on Israel's Geo-Strategic and Security Environment: The Escalating Jihadist Terror in the Sinai Peninsula," Israel Affairs, Vol. 20, No. 3, July 2014 and many others (for the full list see above).

In the context of my academic research, I have carved out a special and even ground-breaking niche for myself in the Israeli and international scholarly communities, acquiring expertise and a reputation in the context of the political, religious, ethnic, tribal and socio-economic processes, along with geostrategic and military aspects and international relations in the broader Middle East and particularly in the Arab-Maghreb and its African Sahel environment. More specifically, my studies place a special emphasis on Libya, the two Sudanese states, Ethiopia, Tunisia, Algeria, Mali, Nigeria, and the collapsed state order and increasingly violent conflicts in the region and its broader Arab and African environs in the pre- and post-“Arab Spring” uprisings; the aggrandizement of the global Jihadist community and the "Islamic State" and their burgeoning political and military power in the Middle East and the African Sahel as well as the Gaza Strip and the Sinai Peninsula; and the erosion in the status of the Arab nation-state. I am deeply involved in the research of these subjects, which have dramatically soared to the top of the political-religious and security-military agenda of the Middle Eastern states and their geopolitical African-Sahelian expanses, as well as to the top of the massive migratory movement from these regions to Europe, taking on special relevance in wake of the uprisings in 2010-2015, spilling over into 2016 too.

This multi-faceted research takes an in-depth look at the issues that are crucial to the understanding of the abovementioned interrelated processes, and often explores them by means of the Libyan test case, which lies at the heart of my academic research project. While the Libyan case is indeed unique, there are numerous analogies that can be drawn between Libya and its society, on the one hand, and other states like Iraq, Syria and Yemen, let alone Mali, Niger, Algeria and others in the environs of the Maghreb-Sahel and the broader Middle East. This is also important part of my academic expertise.

That which in the first half of the second decade of the 2000s clearly appeared to be a process of decline of the Arab nation-state, plausibly moving towards the disintegration of the state framework as we know it, although it may not necessarily be a determinist process, is a top issue on my research agenda for 2016. One sub-topic that I explore is whether it is possible to identify another framework, or forerunners of one or more such frameworks, that can serve as an effective alternative to the current Arab and other Muslim nation-state framework should it collapse, even as it continues to sustain some of its features.

In view of the fact that one of the principal challenges or threats to the status of the Arab nation-state in the early 21st century is militant Islamist power – and especially its increasing jihadist elements, which aspire to establish an Islamic caliphate in the style of Islam’s glory days on the ruins of the nation-state – my study aims at presenting new details and observations regarding this complex issue. The area of the proposed discussion suffers from a striking paucity of academic research and my study sheds light on and offers analysis of one of the lesser-known chapters in the contemporary Middle East and violently chaotic post-Qaddafi Libya and its geostrategic regional and international environs. Having already received several grants and awaiting others, I hope with my research to make an original and innovative contribution, whose conclusions may be applied to Libya and other states and societies in the Middle East and its Maghreb-Sahel regions, as well as to various policy-making forums on the Israeli and international scene in the second decade of the 21st century.
